Purpose

How do you make a company more efficient? That's the task facing the team. Can they find the most efficient, productive solution?

A company has hired a team of consultants (your team) to help improve the performance of the production process at their factory. But there's a problem. In order to get the production line working 30 icons (plastic cards) on a large floor-mounted touch screen monitor must be touched in sequence. This sequence can change and teams must find a quicker more efficient solution.

How It Works

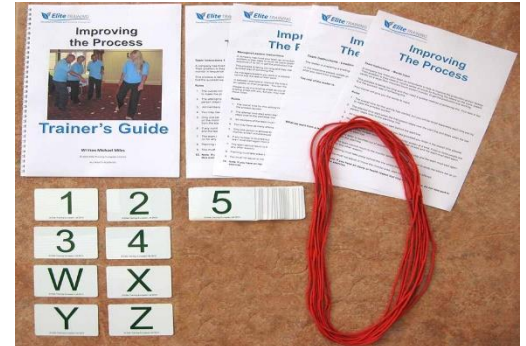

- The facilitator marks out a 'monitor' area with the supplied cord and the start and finish lines and places the 30 numbered cards inside the 'monitor' area keeping sequential numbers apart
- Appoint a small team as managers and a bigger team as their staff and separate the teams
- The managers are given the briefing notes to prepare and brief the staff on how to carry out the task and what sequence the cards should be touched to get the production line working
- The team make their first attempt at achieving the correct sequence, timed by the facilitator. They report back to the managers on their progress, time taken etc
- The managers are under pressure to provide the team with the effective leadership in less than ideal conditions and improve on the process and time taken
- The team tries their new method which is debriefed, and another method tried until they are satisfied with their score or their time is up
- Variation: use the other side of the cards which contain the letters of the alphabet. Supply the team with a word or phrase that they must spell out by touching the correct card (letter) in order

Comments from Continuous Improvement Training Game

"We use it time and time again for different training courses. So adaptable to continuous improvement, teamwork and leadership"

As you recommended, we use observers and they come up with the points that we as facilitators would. Thank you for another of your wonderful training game."

"So much learning comes from this game; it always goes down well. We also use it with people who do not speak English, so all we do is brief them verbally; they do not have to read anything."
